nothing undone, either in diplomate representation or other action, to obtain a compliance by Germany to the request made.

Reports as to the exact form of this note are still largely guesswork. When the Cabinet discussed yesterday the basis of a protest to Germany the note from Berlin admitting responsibility for the observance of international law in the treatment of neutral vessels had not yet arrived. A general protest against Germany's lawless sea policy was at first intended. That is hardly necessary new. The scope of the differences between the two governments has been materially marrowed, and the only vital point left to be dealt with is whether Germany will scknowledge the right of American citizens to travel on British merchantmen and promise to spare the lives of American passengers when such merchantmen are to be torpedoed and sunk.

On this narrowed issue the President's letter restates the American po-On this narrowed issue the President's letter restates the American position thoroughly and with added position to know declare that it will meet the just expectations of the public. It is not a threat nor an ultimatum. It does not state categorically alternatives of action, one or other of which must be accepted unconditionally. It leaves Germany a certain latitude in response. But it thoroughly enlightens the German government on the state of public opinion here, allowing the Berlin Foreign Office to draw its own conclusion as to the determination of the American people to reassert their rights on the high seas and to carry that reassertion to a logical finish wherever fate may lead.

In short, in writing the note the President has reacted to popular sentiment and not given rein to any hindering "personal thoughts."

What will follow the receipt by Germany of the American communication; There are two opinions here. One, coming from those who share Mr. Bryan's pacifist inclinations, holds that there will be no rupture of diplomatic relations for the present. According to this view, Germany will revive the old proposition of a bargain with Great Britain by which the German "war lone" proclamation will be withdrawn in return for the suspension by Great Britain of her embargo on the importation of foodstuffs into Germany if intended for the exclusive use of the civilian population. Such a move would necessarily prolong negetiations, even though the British government's refusal to dicker may be accepted as a foregone conclusion.

"There is no last word in diplomacy," said Mr. Bryan recently. If Germany wants to test the validity of Mr. Bryan's theory there are a dozen ways in which to test it. The United States is doubtless willing to discuss fairly any scheme, compromise or adjustment which seems to be offered in good faith. There is another opinion, however, which foresees an abrupt breach in relations between the two governments. From this point of view, the Kaiser would have to take into account the German public's violent animosity toward Great Britain and its ill concealed German public's violent animosity toward Great Britain and its ill concealed resentment at the recent course of the United States. To cripple the submarine campaign against British commerce by admitting that unarmed British merchantmen carrying American passengers may be destroyed only after the safety of those passengers has been assured, would stir the German people to wrath, possibly to open revolt against the government's concesions. It is held that a rupture of re-stions with the United States even n open declaration of war would eem a lesser cyl to the Kaiser than

Control of Adriatic, Demand of Italy

By GORDON-GORDON SMITH.

Basie, May 12 .- Italy's final terms to Austria demand that the Dual Monarchy shall practically abandon to her the whole of the Adriatic. According to information received from a thoroughly trustworthy source, the Italian government, in addition to requiring the Trentino up to the Brenner, stands firm on the following propositions:

1. Trieste and Istria to a line drawn to the south of Fiume shall be ceded to Italy.

2. Italy consents to hand over to Croatia the part of the coast running from the south of Fiume to the River Zermagna, which enters the Adriatic to the northeast of Zara, at Novigrad. 3. Italy claims the territory between the River Zermagna and the River Narenta, together with all the Dalmatian Islands, 600 in number.

4. Italy will abandon to Servia all the rest of the Austro-Hungarian coast frem the Narento to the Albanian port of Durazzo, including Cattaro. As

A rumer that Linden W. Bates, jr., had been seen among the survivors of the Lusitania in London was discredited last night by his father, Lindon W. Bates, vice-president of the Commis-

"It is an unfortunate mistake," Mr.
Bates said. "Probably some one confused Lindon with my other son, Lindell Bates, who is in England hunting for his brother. If there were any truth in the report I should have heard of it first from Lindell, who is in almost hourly communication with me."

London, May 12.—"Whatever might be the wisest thing to do, going to war would be the most fatal," was Miss Jane Addams's comment on the position of the United States, with regard to the Lusitania case to-day. She said this to the Tribune correspondent at a reception given her at St. Ermin's Hotel to-day by some of the foremost women of England.

London, May 12.—Plans are maturing for the great memorial service to be held here within a few days. A. N. Connett, president of the American Society, to-day discussed the matter with Ambassador Page. A meeting of the executive committee has been called for to-morrow. The American women's organizations will also hold meetings, and the suggestion will be taken up by all American societies.

London officialdom will be invited, and tis not unlikely that a representative of the King will be there. An effort will be made to keep anything of political character out of the service. The American survivors will attend. It is probable the service will be held in St. Paul's.
